voice my own opinion on what I wanted to do, gave me countless sources to apply for college grants, connected me with people in the fields I am interested in so I could ask questions and find the right path for me.”

Capital High School is a 90-90-90 school, with 90% of students eligible for free and reduced-price lunch, 90% BIPOC students and a 90% graduation rate. “As a school counselor committed to disrupting systems of oppression, Marianne has committed to the personal work of examining white supremacy culture and how it permeates her professional and personal life,” said Karyn Stocks Glover, principal, Capital High School. “She has remained deeply curious about the characteristics of white supremacy culture and how those characteristics impact working with BIPOC students and their families. Students who work with Marianne can expect asset-based, student-driven coaching that focuses on the students’ dreams first and the pathways to those dreams second.

“Each year, the School Counselor of the Year program shows us what the research tells us – that school counselors have a significant impact on students’ academic achievement, social/emotional development and plans for life after graduation,” said Jill Cook, ASCA executive director. “Through their dedication, contributions and excellence, these finalists have demonstrated their commitment to the values and mission of the school counseling profession.”

The School Counselor of the Year and finalists will be celebrated in Washington, D.C., in February 2022 and will participate in webinars and additional online events during National School Counseling Week, Feb. 7–11, 2022.
